If there was a way to deter ordinary citizens of letting it be known how they feel about the city, it would seem you have found it in the forms that we have to complete in order to say one simple thing. On the whole, we love our city, because, unlike, say Manchester, it is easy to define. The demarcation lines between us and other communities are clear, giving the whole city a feeling of unity. Within that whole there are green places which raise the spirits and give colour to the everyday grind. I cannot begin to understand how anyone with any connection to the city can play any part in devising a plan which removes these spiritual (holy?) places from our midst. The implication is that this is the work of the "ruling" Labour party on the City Council. I really cannot believe that this is so, and yet I have not read anything from that group that refutes this.

PLEASE SAVE THE 246 AREAS OF GREEN BELT IN THE CITY OF LEEDS.

BUILD A NEW TOWN COMPLETE WITH INFRASTRUCTURE, IN THE VAST OPEN SPACES TO THE EAST OF LEEDS AND CONCENTRATE ON ELIMINATING THE UGLINESS AND DERELICTION ON THE " BROWN FIELD" SITES IN THE CITY ITSELF.

YOURS SINCERELY,

THOMAS MIDDLETON.

I don't suppose this is acceptable, but perhaps you could forward it to Councillor Wakefield.?
